TARIFF AND WHEAT

TRUTH THAT FARMERS SEEM SLOW TO REALIZE

Surplus Products of Agriculture Sald In Competition with Other Countries, But Trusts Are in the wheat growing regions for or-ranking a combine to hold their wheat until the price advaces. A dispatch from Kansas City reports the price of wheat as 50 cents a bush-Kansas. There is a loss in growing wheat at that price, with all the farmer buys at the present high prices. The tariff-protected trusts have advanced the prices of nearly everything the farmer buys over 45 per cont since the present high tariff law was passed, so that prosperity for the wheat farmer is a myth, all the second though Secretary Wilson, who, being secretary of agriculture, should know better, declares the farmers were never so prosperous. Secretary Shaw is making equally presposterous statements, and states in the speeches he is making on his partisan tour that the tariff makes the farmers prosperous because it protects the home market from foreign importations. But facts belie their words, for wheat is protected in the tariff by a duty of 25 cents a bushel, but that does not prevent the price from de-It is strange that Republican farmers swallow such Republican state ments and vote to continue that party in power, which protects every trust that produces what the farmer must buy and only pretends to protect the farm products. The tariff includes duties on wheat, corn, oats, barley, cattle, hogs and other agricultural products, but the price of those farm products is settled by the law of supof wheat and other farm products it has to be exported and sold in the world's markets in competition with the surplus of other countries, and that fixes the price here. The tariff duty might be doubled and it would have no effect on the price, or it might be abolished and the price would not be affected. There is no tariff duty on cotton, that product being on the free list, yet the price of cotton is advancing, while the protect-

No farmers' trust or farmers' union can control the price of wheat unless the combination is complete enough to prevent wheat being sold to the mills which supply the flour that the American people require. If the wheat growers could prevent enough wheat being marketed to supply the mills, the milling combine at the great flour milling centers, such as Minneapolis, would probably price enough to induce the farmers to sell until the price was too high to manufacture and ship the flour abroad at a profit. When that limit was would be shut down rather than run them at a loss. To prevent the mills shutting down in the spring of 1905, when there was a shortage of wheat, the administration allowed Canadian wheat to be imported in bond, without the payment of the duty of 25 mills at Minneapolis, and exported as flour. That was the Republican way of protecting the farmers when they had a very short crop and an opportunity of averaging up the prices with the years like the present one when a large surplus has been raised The fact is that the farmers bave prospered in spite of the tariff, which has increased the price of about al they buy through the protection trusts and combines enjoy. The good or poor crops are not the result of the tariff, but good crops are due to the bounty of nature when the season is propitious, and the poor crops when nature frowns and is unfavorable. The ideal for the farmer is to be allowed to buy in the cheapest market withou any more tariff restriction than is necessary to produce enough revenue nomically administered, and to sell in the dearest market that his produce can reach. The Republican policy, miscalled protection, compels farmer, and everyone else for that matter, to pay not only the tariff tax to the government, which averaged on all imports for last year 59.84 per cent, but the still greater tax which the tariff allows the trusts to collect by increasing their prices, which averages on trust products a much greater percentage than the govern ment collects. Not content with this tends to provide protection on farmers' wheat and other cereals, the price of which no law can govern, because the surplus crop, after our own people are supplied, must be sold in the open markets of the world after paying the railroads and shipping bines all they demand.

That is Republican protectionism which would not stand a minute if Republican farmers would join their Democratic neighbors in electing tariff reformers to congress.

Eggs are at a fancy price, milk is higher, meat is again dearer and most other necessities, except flour, have advanced in price, which makes it trying for the housewife to make both ble for a good deal of it. Yet the Re publican candidates for congress have declared for the stand-pat policy to continue if they control congress.
